Dear Mark Twain scholars,

On behalf of the Center for Mark Twain Studies and Elmira College, it is my pleasure to welcome you to The Eighth International Conference on the State of Mark Twain Studies!

The CMTS mission statement clearly states that it is dedicated to fostering and supporting scholarship and pedagogy related to Mark Twain. The primary purpose of CMTS is to serve an international community of scholars and educators. The papers, presentations, and discussions that will take place over the next three days reflect the depth and variety of research associated with Twain Studies. No other American author has inspired such a diverse range of meaningful scholarship and creative work. To help assure that the proud tradition of Twain Studies continues into the next generation and beyond, CMTS focuses not only on continued support of many of the most recognizable Twain scholars from around the world, but also promoting rigorous Twain scholarship from emerging, independent, and interdisciplinary scholars. We hope this conference reflects not only the breadth and quality of the current field, but also its ever-growing potential.

I want to personally thank you for attending Elmira 2017. I am confident that it will be filled with engaging papers, stimulating conversations, and lots of good cheer!

- Joe Lemak, Director of the Center for Mark Twain Studies

Twain’s Connection to Elmira College

Next summer we will celebrate the 150th anniversary of Mark Twain’s first visit to Elmira. The story as he told it was of a poor innocent who fell in love with the portrait of a beautiful girl and was willing to travel anywhere for the opportunity to woo her. As I see it, it is the story of a 32-year-old polymath nursing a fragile celebrity who had spent two decades without a permanent address; a couch-surfper whose charisma was frequently the only thing distinguishing him from a vagabond.

In August of 1868 the friend upon whom Mark Twain unapologetically imposed was Charley Langdon. Whatever his intentions towards Charley, it is evident that Samuel Clemens fell for his sister, Livy, like a bawdy, heretical Young Werther. If Sam had a boom-box that winter he would’ve been standing at the corner of Church and Main holding it over his head like a dolt.

Livy and her family were, as my predecessor Michael Kiskis’s work so beautifully evidences, the best that bourgeois virtue has to offer. Livy’s father, one of the founders of Elmira College, somehow saw that the audacious man-child without a single friend willing to speak on his behalf would become a devoted husband and father. The next Christmas, Sam promised his fiancé that she would never know the homesickness which turned him cold. He thus laid the groundwork for their annual summer pilgrimage to Quarry Farm, where Twain would both continue to benefit from his in-laws’ legendary generosity and become bit by bit the man Jervis Langdon predicted he would be.

With similar generosity Ida Langdon gifted the octagonal study in which her uncle wrote many of his most famous works to Elmira College and her nephew deeded Quarry Farm to the Center for Mark Twain Studies. Twain said, “Mr. Langdon was a man whose character and nature were made up pretty exclusively of excellencies.” Those excellencies play an enormous role in making Twain’s career, CMTS, and this conference possible. May we prove a fraction as worthy as he did!

In the early 1870s, William Dean Howells wrote in My Mark Twain (1910) that he traveled regularly from Cambridge to the new Clemens Hartford home, where the Clemenses “used to give me a royal chamber on the ground floor.” The two friends “sat up late, he smoking the last of his innumerable cigars, and soothing his tense nerves with a mild hot Scotch, while we both talked and talked and talked, of everything in the heavens and on the earth, and the waters under the earth.”

The “royal chamber” was Howells’ name for what the Clemenses called the Mahogany Room—a suite off the majestic library on the ground floor of the Hartford house, comprising a bedroom, small dressing room, and bathroom. It was named for its mahogany paneling and bedroom set, and reserved for particularly honored guests.

Along with Howells, guests during the Clemens era (1874-91) included journalist and explorer Henry Stanley, George Washington Cable (who infected the family with mumps), and Grace King, a regional author from Louisiana who compared the suite to “the Beast’s castle,” with herself in the role of Beauty. The suite served other purposes—a place for Clara Clemens to study, a green room for the theatricals Susy put on, and a place where Livy could assemble baskets for the poor of the parish at Christmastime.

The Clemenses sold the house to an insurance executive and his family in 1903, and in succeeding decades the Mahogany Suite served as quarters for the headmaster of a boys’ school and a self-contained rented apartment. In the 1950s, restoration work began on the house, and the suite was restored to what was then considered an accurate reflection of the room’s appearance in the 1870s—a centerpiece being the mahogany bed and dresser that the Clemenses had owned. Subsequent decades saw occasional change and reinterpretation until 2006 when the room was stripped bare in order to do a rigorous examination of its details.

Then financial troubles hit the Mark Twain House, and for a decade the bare room was described to visitors as “under restoration.” The museum recovered, but restoration did not get under way until 2016, using funds from a State of Connecticut bonding grant. A research-oriented restoration architectural firm was secured, and—under the guidance of the Chief Curator—the architects built on previous research and reports to provide an entirely new interpretation of the suite. Period “honey comb” wallpaper designed by the Clemenses’ friend Candace Wheeler, America’s first prominent female interior designer, was reproduced; plumbing fixtures in the bathroom were discussed and debated; furnishings appropriate to the period were sought out; and a group of skilled craftspeople went to work.

The result was unveiled to the public in December 2016. Panel members will tell the tale of the Mahogany Suite, both in its Clemens and post-Clemens period, with illustrative images.

SPECIAL PANEL: Joan of Arc
Paula Harrington, Colby College, Panel Chair

Over two decades of gender-inspired readings, with Linda Morris’ Gender Play (2007) as a milestone, have firmly established Mark Twain’s favorite heroine as an icon of patriotism and feminism.

Where should or could studies of Joan of Arc go from there?

A recent research project sponsored by the France-Berkeley Fund and the Elmira College Center for Mark Twain Studies tackled the vast marginalia left by the author in the historical sources he used while writing the novel.

This workshop wishes to share the findings of that research with the Twain community as well as open up new perspectives. The marginalia will be presented and analyzed in detail, picturing Twain as a learned historian capable of putting elaborate French texts to use. Putting the marginalia forefront and center-stage echoes Twain’s own democratic reconfiguration of the sphere of the memorable, of history, and the way marginal characters can weigh on the course of events. The main source of Joan of Arc’s resilience and extraordinary destiny may well rest in her motivation.

Considering the historical figure and the literary character not simply as a thing of the past, the workshop will also look at how her motivation an concretely and effectively improve people’s health.

“Work in Progress at the Mark Twain Project: San Francisco Correspondence 1865–1866”
by Benjamin Griffin, University of California, Berkeley

Clemens moved to San Francisco in May of 1864, giving up his post at the Virginia City (Nev.) Territorial Enterprise, where he had become known as “Mark Twain.” In San Francisco, he found work at the Morning Call newspaper; then, in 1865, he was rehired by the Enterprise as a San Francisco correspondent writing a daily “Letter.” The writings in the Project’s forthcoming volume come from that phase, in 1865–66, being principally writings for the Enterprise, together with contemporaneous contributions to other papers. Copies of the Enterprise of the period being almost entirely non-extant, presenting a text is largely a matter of reconstructing original “Letters” from contemporary reprints in other papers. It is a very exacting business. A handful of “Letters” exist in the original printing, pasted into Clemens’s scrapbook (at Yale’s Beinecke Library); these have been freshly examined and for the new edition.

Depending on how you feel about reading ephemera (as opposed to “monuments of unaging intellect”), Mark Twain’s Enterprise “Letters” may be the most impertinent, most characterful, and funniest, things he wrote for publication. The importance of this period is well known to scholars, yet its writings have remained poorly represented in print; the reader has had to use a small bookshelf of publications, arbitrarily selected and, too often, inadequately. researched. The new book supplements and in part supersedes our 1981 volume Early Tales and Sketches, Volume 2. In combination, the two volumes provide critical, annotated texts, with full textual apparatus, of all of Mark Twain’s published work starting with his return to the pages of the Enterprise and ending with his departure for Hawaii in March 1866. This talk is an illustrated tour of the forthcoming volume, designed not just to highlight the improvements that have been made to the texts, but also to show the editorial process behind the improvements – such as fuller texts, different textual readings, writings previously unavailable outside the Yale Scrapbook, etc. The presentation uses many images of original materials, organized to show how an editor reads them and deploys them. And in this talk, newspaper clippings, reference works, and contemporary images are gathered into a tapestry contextualizing these often obscure writings to an extent the published book cannot achieve.

1:00 - 2:15 p.m.  Field Trip to the Park Church and Woodlawn Cemetery

Founded in 1846 by a group of abolitionists including Jervis Langdon, The Park Church has been a strong presence in Elmira’s history and some of its congregation were close friends and family members to Mark Twain, including Rev. Thomas K. Beecher. Twain’s sister-in-law, Susan Crane, attended the Church for most of her life, donating the flowers at Quarry Farm on a regular basis for the church services. Known for its striking architectural features, The Park Church contained Elmira’s first public library and has a long history of charitable service to the Elmira community.

The tour will also stop at Woodlawn Cemetery, the final resting place of the Sam Clemens, Livy, their children, and the Langdons.

This bus tour will depart at 1:00 p.m. from the Meier Hall parking lot. The tour will be led by Jenny Monroe, local historian and member of The Park Church.

SPECIAL PANEL: Adapting Twain’s Short Works for the Stage: David Carkeet and the Mark Twain Players
Library - Tripp Lecture Hall

In 2016, I began adapting selected short works by Mark Twain for the stage, primarily as ten-minute plays- an odd little dramatic form not much seen outside of festivals and competitions (with the exception of John Cariani’s frequently produced collection, Almost, Maine). I found several of Twain’s short stories well suited to this short form, thanks to their high-concept premises, their clear and easily established characters, and their brisk movement to resolution. But the project posed challenges as well-almost, it seemed, a different challenge for every work I chose.

I have engaged the Mark Twain Players, at their usual rate, to present adaptations of three works as staged readings (music stands, few props, little movement): “Buck Fanshaw’s Funeral,” “The McWilliamses and the Burglar Alarm,” and Meisterschaft— a medium-length Twain play shortened to about 12 minutes in my version. After the staged reading, I will talk about the adaptation process. The Mark Twain Players who will tread the boards beside me are John Bird, Kerry Driscoll, Dennis Eddings, Susan K. Harris, Holger Kersten, and Linda Morris.
Field Trip to the Chemung County Historical Society

Take a walk through time and discover treasures from the past. The Chemung County Historical Society “brings history alive” through interpretive exhibitions, education programs, and publications that tell Chemung County’s history. Highlights of the museum include “Mark Twain’s Elmira,” an exhibit that focuses on the people and places that the author knew during his time here. The exhibit features artifacts used by Mark Twain and his family and historic images of Elmira during the late 1800s. This tour, given by the staff of the Historical Society, will also include a “behind-the-scenes” look at some artifacts not currently on display for the general public.

If you can’t make the tour, your conference name tag will grant you free admission to the Society for the duration of Elmira 2017.

Buses to the Chemung County Historical Society will leave at 4:00 p.m. from the Meier Hall parking lot.

Happy Hour Meier Hall - Basel Lounge

Finger Lakes Distilling, a local craft distillery, is proud to participate in the Eighth International Conference on the State of Mark Twain Studies. The producers and purveyors of the nationally recognized McKenzie Whiskeys will be releasing a specialty bottling selected by the Center for Mark Twain Studies. This Single Barrel Bourbon Whiskey will commemorate Elmira 2017 with a nod to Twain’s love for bourbon and to the region where he spent so many summers.

Conference attendees are invited to sample this limited release and purchase bottles during the Friday evening happy hour and the Saturday evening party at Quarry Farm.

“How solemn and beautiful is the thought that the earliest pioneer of civilization, the van-leader of civilization, is never the steam-boat, never the railroad, never the newspaper, never the Sabbath-school, never the missionary – but always whiskey!... Westward the Jug of Empire takes its way!”

by Ben Tarnoff

Ben Tarnoff is the author of The Bohemians: Mark Twain and the San Francisco Writers Who Reinvented American Literature (Penguin, 2014). He also writes regularly for The Guardian on technology and politics, and is a founder of Logic, a new magazine about technology.

A meditation on Twain’s weaponization of humor for social ends, and the lessons it bears for the present political moment. With special attention to Twain’s use of vulgarity, and his gleeful demolition of norms. In our own era of political obscenity, what can Twain teach us about the power of profanity from below?

What will the future hold for Mark Twain on the web? Ever since Jim Zwick opened the websites “Mark Twain on the Philippines” and “Mark Twain Resources on the World Wide Web” to the public in January 1995, scholarship on Mark Twain has had a significant presence on the Internet. Sites such as Barbara Schmidt’s “Twainquotes.com” and Stephen Railton’s “Mark Twain in his Times,” for some time given scholars access to Mark Twain’s letters—along with websites of the Center for Mark Twain Studies and the Mark Twain House, the many electronic versions of Twain texts available online, and Twain-list, have all enhanced Twain’s visibility on the web. The roundtable will discuss recent new and coming developments including the new website of the Center for Mark Twain Studies at Elmira College, the digital initiatives of the National Council of Teachers of English, and the American Writers Museum opening in 2017, and “Global Huck.” Global Huck is a multi-lingual, transnational digital project involving collaboration between the universities of Lille and Stanford that aims to create an online, interactive generic platform involving a crowdsourced model for corpus collection and annotation. The session will discuss digital resources for classroom teachers, for Mark Twain scholars, for scholars of translation studies, American Studies and Cultural Studies, for museum goers, and for the public.

The Assault of Laughter: A Roundtable
Judith Yaross Lee, Ohio University, Panel Chair

“Men show their character in nothing more clearly than by what they find laughable,” pronounced the sage known as Anonymous, but analysis of the laughable has tended toward the murky nonetheless. Not only do critics disagree about what is laughable, but they are also unsure about how to discuss laughter itself. Nor have they settled on the terms most basic to the critical enterprise of commenting on comic arts. Using Mark Twain as a springboard, this roundtable offers a look at some basic terminology that circulates in studies of humor but, like Chinese dialects, is far too often unintelligible when we speak.
